I get a lot of questions regarding oil both on my program and emailed to me through out the week. I often state that the type or brand of oil is less important then the frequency of the oil change. One often overlooked part of the oil change is the oil filter. I had come across a website years ago created by a guy named Russ Knize, that did a detailed study of the different brands of oil filters on the market today. Recently, one of my loyal listeners, Bill in Tucson sent me a couple links to the site which has been recently updated.

Link to the study:
